What wu-wei gives us, Slingerland argues, is "a sense of being at home in some framework of values, however vague or tenuous," which allows us "to recover the crucial social dimension of spontaneity" something else that distinguishes it from Western concepts like "flow."

Trying Not to Try: How to Cultivate the Paradoxical Art of

One of Taoism's most important concepts is wu wei, which is sometimes translated as "non-doing" or "non-action." A better way to think of it, however, is as a paradoxical "Action of non-action." Wu wei refers to the cultivation of a state of being in which our actions are quite effortlessly in alignment with the ebb and flow of the elemental cycles of the natural world. It is a kind of "going with the flow" that is characterized by great ease and awareness, in which ...

What Is the Meaning of Wu Wei as a Taoist Concept?

non-action (wu wei) leaving the noumenal centre in control of phenomenal activity, and free from fictitious interference by an imaginary 'self'. Are you still thinking, looking, living, as from an imaginary phenomenal centre? As long as you do that you can never recognise your freedom. Could any statement be more classic? Could any statement be more obvious? Could any statement be more vital ...
